

Ivy Fairchild has been the chief development officer for Urban Health Plan (UHP) since April 2005. In this role, she is responsible for all of the organization's philanthropic endeavors, communications, outreach and external affairs. Prior to joining the UHP family, she served as director of development and external affairs at the Primary Care Development Corporation and associate vice president for government and community affairs at Columbia University Medical. During her tenure at Columbia University she raised over $15M for community/institutional programs.

Ivy has a Bachelor of Arts degree from Queens College, and advanced degrees in Organizational Development from Columbia University's Teachers College and Public Policy and Management from the Columbia University Mailman School of Public Health.